Flight Service CBS Message/Must Read

THE STATE OF THE S

14-081

Subject: Interim AA Reciprocal Jumpseat Policy

Date: June 19, 2014

FA Bases Affected: ALL

Beginning June 20, US Airways flight attendants will be able to ride the cabin jumpseat (CJ) on American operated flights. Likewise, legacy American Airlines flight attendants will have access to the CJ on US Airways operated flights.

How it works

Flight attendants at each airline will continue to have priority for the jumpseat on their respective AA or US operated flights. Legacy American flight attendants requesting the jumpseat on American operated flights will continue to be accommodated as they are today – in check-in time order within pass classification. Next, legacy US Airways flight attendants requesting the jumpseat will be accommodated in check-in time order.

On US Airways operated flights, legacy US Airways flight attendants who have checked in at the gate and completed a jumpseat card more than 30 minutes prior to departure will be accommodated in occupational ("bidding") seniority order. Next, any legacy US Airways flight attendants who checked in within 30 minutes of departure will be accommodated in check-in time order. After that, Legacy American flight attendants will be accommodated in check-in time order.

How to list for American operated flights

Make a flight listing using the myIDTravel website. Legacy US flight attendants traveling under the reciprocal (free) cabin seat agreement (U7's) on AA operated flights will have the flexibility of being assigned a cabin jumpseat. (At this time AA flight attendants are unable to travel on US operated flights at the "CBJ1" priority because the US airport check-in system does not issue jumpseat boarding passes.)

What's changing on American operated flights?

Envoy (formerly American Eagle) flight attendants requesting the jumpseat will now be accommodated after US Airways flight attendants requesting the jumpseat. After Envoy flight attendants have been processed, US Airways Express flight attendants (Piedmont and PSA) will be offered the jumpseat.

What's changing on US Airways operated flights?

US Airways Express flight attendants will be accommodated after American flight attendants. Envoy flight attendants will be accommodated after US Airways Express flight attendants.

Until we have a fully integrated employee travel policy as well as a single collective bargaining agreement for flight attendants at both airlines, administering the new jumpseat policy will be a manual process for our gate agents. Your patience and professionalism during the initial rollout is appreciated.

Additional information and QnA is available on Wings.

FEEDBACK VENUES:

🗅 Ask InFlight Feedback Form on Wings 🖈 askinflight@usairways.com

Note: Messages to CLT/DCA/PHL FAs are distributed via Crew Broadcasting System (CBS)
Messages to PHX FAs are distributed via Must Read Book (MR)

Interim Flight Attendant Jumpseat Policy

American Metal

Jumpseat accommodation order

- 1. AA FAs in priority list order based on check-in time.
- 2. US FAs in priority list order based on check in time (must present Crew ID to have agent place a on priority list).
- 3. Envoy F/As in priority list order based on check in time ("CJ EAG" indicator)
- Wholly owned US Airways Express F/As in priority list order based on check-in time

NRSA Priority ("Standby") List appearance in order of pass classification:

- 1. D1T AA in order of check-in time
- 2. D1 AA in order of check-in time
- 3. D2T AA in order of check-in time
- 4. D2 AA in order of check-in time
- 5. UST US in order of check-in time
- 6. US- US in order of check-in time
- 7. U7 US in order of check-in time

Note: A person's position on the priority list does not necessarily determine his/her order of accommodation on jumpseat. The priority list determines accommodation of non-revs for customer seats.

US Airways Metal

Jumpseat accommodation order

Note: In order to be accommodated on the jumpseat, all F/As must complete a jumpseat card at the gate.

- More than 30 minutes prior to departure: US FAs in SID ("bidding" seniority) order.
- 2. Within 30 minutes of departure:
 - us FAs in first-come, firstserve order based on agents receipt of completed jumpseat form at the gate.
 - Regardless of check-in time:
 AA FAs in first-come, first-served order based on agents receipt of completed jumpseat form at the gate
 - Regardless of check-in time:
 Wholly owned US Airways
 Express F/As in first-come, first-serve order based on agents receipt of completed jumpseat form at the gate
 - d. Regardless of check-in time: Envoy F/As in first-come, firstserve order based on agents receipt of completed jumpseat form at the gate

NRSA Priority ("Standby") List appearance in order of pass classification::

- 1 SA1P US in seniority order
- 2. SA3P- US in seniority order
- 3. SA5A AA in order of check-in time
- CBJ1 OAL F/As on reciprocal agreements in order of check-in time (not jumpseat eligible)

Note: A person's position on the priority list does not necessarily determine his/her order of accommodation on jumpseat. The priority list determines accommodation of non-revs for customer seats.

There is no "thru" status for non-revenue travelers on US Airways operated flights.

What do the standby list codes mean on each airline?

Sabre	American Metal	Shares	US Airways Metal
Code		Code
D1T	An employee, spouse/domestic partner, registered companion, or dependent child using a "vacation pass" who originated travel in an upline city
D1	An employee, spouse/domestic partner, registered companion, or dependent child using a "vacation pass"	SA1P	Personal travel for active/retired employees (mainline or wholly-owned subsidiaries) and their accompanying eligible family members traveling on a Vacation pass
D2T	An employee, spouse/domestic partner, registered companion, dependent child, or parent who's traveling with the employee who originated travel in an upline city
D2	An employee, spouse/domestic partner, registered companion, dependent child, or parent who's traveling with the employee	SA3P	Personal travel for active employees (mainline or wholly owned subsidiaries) and their accompanying eligible family members and/or Guest Pass riders.
D2PT	A parent of an employee who is traveling without the employee who originated travel in an upline city
D2P	A parent of an employee who is traveling without the employee
UST	A US Airways employee who originated travel in an upline city	:
US	A US Airways employee	SA5A	American mainline and wholly-owned subsidiary employees, retirees and accompanied or unaccompanied eligible family members
D3T	A "buddy pass" traveler who originated travel in an upline city
D3	A "buddy" pass traveler	SA7P	Unaccompanied Guest Pass travelers of mainline and Express (wholly owned and non-wholly owned) employees andretirees.
U7	A US Airways F/A traveling on the reciprocal (free) cabin seat agreement.	CBJ1	An AA F/A traveling on the reciprocal (free) cabin seat agreement. Not jumpseat eligible due to computer restriction.

Note: There is no "thru" status for non-revenue travelers on US Airways operated flights.

Interim Flight Attendant Jumpseat Policy: Questions & Answers

6/12/2014	4. Flight Attendants currently have two options when traveling on the other airline's "metal". One is using the interim travel program by making a listing on the MylDTravel website and	Travel Pass Classification
	On American operated flights: Answer: First – Legacy American F/As in check-in time order within pass classification. Second – US Airways F/As in check-in time order. Third – Envoy F/As traveling at the D1 or D2 priority in check-in time order. Fourth – Wholly owned US Airways Express F/As traveling at the "US" standby priority in check-in time order. On US Airways operated flights: Answer: First – Legacy US F/As who checked in 30+ minutes before departure in seniority order. Second – US Airways F/As who checked in within 30 minutes of departure in check-in time order. Third – Legacy AA F/As in checkin time order. Fourth – Wholly owned US Airways Express F/As traveling at the "US" standby priority in check-in time order. Fifth – Envoy F/As in check-in time order.	,
6/12/2014	3. What order should the Gate Agent go in when processing jumpseat requests?	Order of Accommodation
6/12/2014	 If I am non-reving on my "own" metal, are there any changes to how the standby/priority list is processed? Answer: No. Legacy AA F/As traveling on American metal and Legacy US F/As traveling on US metal will continue to be processed just as they are today. 	Order of Accommodation
		Cards
6/12/2014	1. Do I have to complete a jumpseat card? Answer: If you're standing	Jumpseat Authorization
Lindated	Question & Answer	Topic

reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for AA operated flights, it's a two-step process. If you're standing by for a customer seat, s/he can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed in the order in which you check-in with the gate agent at the next flight. 6. Can I use a D1/SA1P pass to get a higher priority for the jumpseat? Answer: If you're a legacy American F/A, you may continue to use your D1's according to company policy. Remember once you've checked in, you may not change your boarding priority/pass classification. Legacy American F/As currently do not have the ability to use a "D1" or equivalent when standing by for a US operated flight. If you're a legacy US F/A, current procedures apply when traveling on US operated flights. Additionally, SA1P/D1 travel is not applicable to legacy US employees when standing by for AA operated flights at this time. 7. The US Airways F/As cannot be denied the jumpseat as a result of a weight restriction. Does the same apply to legacy		interim jumpseat policy will not affect this provision of the US
reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for a customer seat, she can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed in the order in which you check-in with the gate agent at the next flight. 6. Can I use a D1/SA1P pass to get a higher priority for the jumpseat? Answer: If you're a legacy American F/As currently do not have the ability to use a "D1" or equivalent when standing by for a US operated flight. If you're a legacy LS F/A, current procedures apply when traveling on US operated flights. Additionally, SA1P/D1 travel is not applicable to legacy US employees when standing by for AA operated flights at this time. 7. The US Airways/AFA Agreement has a provision that says Legacy US Ananot be denied the jumpseat as a		result of a weight restriction. Does the same apply to legacy American F/As when they travel on US metal? How about to
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for a customer seat, s/he can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed in the order in which you check-in with the gate agent at the next flight. 6. Can I use a D1/SA1P pass to get a higher priority for the jumpseat? Answer: If you're a legacy American F/As currently do not have the ability to use a "D1" or equivalent when standing by for a US operated flight. If you're a legacy US F/A, current procedures apply when traveling on US operated flights. Additionally, SA1P/D1 travel is not applicable to legacy US employees when standing by for AA operated flights at this time.	; 1 1 2
"reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for a customer seat, s/he can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed in the order in which you check-in with the gate agent at the next flight. 6. Can I use a D1/SA1P pass to get a higher priority for the jumpseat? Answer: If you're a legacy American F/A, you may continue to use your D1s according to company policy. Remember once you've checked in, you may not change your boarding priority/pass classification. Legacy American F/As currently do not have the ability to use a "D1" or equivalent when standing by for a US operated flight. If you're a legacy VS F/A, current procedures apply when traveling on US operated flights. Additionally, SA1P/D1 travel is not applicable to legacy US employees when standing by for AA operated flights at this time.	6/12/2014		Weight Restrictions
"reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for US operated flights, it's a two-step process. If you're standing by for a customer seat, s/he can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed in the order in which you check-in with the gate agent at the next flight. 6. Can I use a D1/SA1P pass to get a higher priority for the jumpseat? Answer: If you're a legacy American F/A, you may continue to use your D1s according to company policy. Remember once you've checked in, you may not change your boarding priority/pass classification. Legacy American F/As currently do not have the ability to use a "D1" or equivalent when standing by for a US operated flight. If you're a legacy US F/A, current procedures apply when traveling on US operated flights. Additionally, SA1P/D1 travel is
reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for a customer seat, she can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed in the order in which you check-in with the gate agent at the next flight. 6. Can I use a D1/SA1P pass to get a higher priority for the jumpseat? Answer: If you're a legacy American F/A, you may continue to use your D1s according to company policy. Remember once you've checked in, you may not change your boarding by for a US operated flight. If you're a legacy American F/As currently do not have the ability to use a "D1" or equivalent when standing by for a US operated flight. If you're a legacy US F/A, current procedures apply		when traveling on US operated flights. Additionally, SA1P/D1 travel is
"reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for a customer seat, s/he can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed in the order in which you check-in with the gate agent at the next flight. 6. Can I use a D1/SATP pass to get a higher priority for the jumpseat? Answer: If you're a legacy American F/A, you may continue to use your D1s according to company policy. Remember once you've checked in, you may not change your boarding priority/pass classification. Legacy American F/As currently do not have the ability to use a "D1" or equivalent when standing by for a US		operated flight. If you're a legacy US F/A, current procedures apply
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for a customer seat, s/he can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed in the order in which you check-in with a gate agent at the next flight. 6. Can I use a D1/SA1P pass to get a higher priority for the jumpseat? Answer: If you're a legacy American F/A, you may continue to use your D1s according to company policy. Remember once you've checked in, you may not change your boarding port of the pass classification. I enacy American F/As currently do not a pass classification.		have the ability to use a "D1" or equivalent when standing by for a US
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for a customer seat, s/he can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed in the order in which you check-in with a gate agent at the next flight. 6. Can I use a D1/SA1P pass to get a higher priority for the jumpseat? Answer: If you're a legacy American F/A, you may continue to use your D1s according to company policy. Remember—		priority/pass classification Equaty American E/As currently do not
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for a customer seat, she can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed in the order in which you check-in with the gate agent at the next flight. 6. Can I use a D1/SA1P pass to get a higher priority for the jumpseat? Answer: If you're a legacy American F/A, you may		continue to use your DTs according to company policy. Remember –
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for US operated flights, it's a two-step process. If you're standing by for a customer seat, she can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed in the order in which you check-in with the gate agent at the next flight. 6. Can I use a D1/SA1P pass to get a higher priority for the
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for a customer seat, s/he can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed in the order in which you check-in with the gate agent at the next flight.	6/12/2014		Vacation Passes/D1s/SA1P
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for US operated flights, it's a two-step process. If you're standing by for a customer seat, s/he can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed		in the order in which you check-in with the gate agent at the next flight.
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for US operated flights, it's a two-step process. If you're standing by for a customer seat, s/he can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate		and complete another jumpseat card. These cards will be processed
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for a customer seat, s/he can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing		by for a jumpseat, you must check-in with a gate agent at the new gate
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for US operated flights, it's a two-step process. If you're standing by for a		customer seat, s/he can "roll you" to the next flight. If you're standing
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for US		operated flights, it's a two-step process. If you're standing by for a
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted		accordingly on the next flight's standby list. When standing by for US
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight.		customers will retain their original check-in time and be slotted
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When standing by for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer		unaccommodated non-revenue customers the next flight. Those
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the jumpseat, will I automatically be "rolled over" to the next flight? Answer: It depends on which metal you're flying. When stending by		for AA operated flights, the gate agents will normally transfer
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures. 5. If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm listed for the		Answer: It depends on which metal you're fiving Nibon standing by
paying the $2.50 booking fee. The second is using the "reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program procedures.	6/12/2014	If I am not accommodated on the flight on which I'm	Rolling from Flight to Flight
is a
is		the jumpseat, you should follow the interim employee travel program booking fee. The second is using the seat agreement" that exists between American Can I request the jumpseat on either pass Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is		only valid for travel in a cabin (customer) seat. To be considered for booking fee. The second is using the seat agreement" that exists between American Can I request the jumpseat on either pass		classification? Answer: No. Our reciprocal cabin seat agreement is the een American		and US Airways. Can I request the jumpseat on either pass
†ho		"reciprocal cabin seat agreement" that exists between American
Opulated	opuated	2 EO hooking for The second is using

A.